Modelling Sustainability

SIERRA YOUTH COALITION

In all of the work we do with youth aged 14-26, Sierra Youth Coalition puts into action its firm belief that if young people are to become active in their communities, they need to be meaningfully engaged and provided with the skills and opportunities to do so. We use creative, and sometimes arts-based approaches to encourage critical thinking.

By approaching environmental and social justice issues from a perspective of sustainability, we demonstrate how political, economic, environmental and social justice issues are related to one another, and how society and individuals impact these issues. We encourage youth to go “beyond the classroom” into their personal lives, homes and communities to create positive change.

Sierra Youth Coalition is the youth branch of the Sierra Club of Canada. Through grassroots action, SYC addresses environmental and social sustainability by focusing on environmental integrity, social equity and economic prosperity. The Sierra Youth Coalition strives to involve, educate, change, and invoke seven generation consciousness. Our organization reflects the belief that all things are interrelated.

Current partnership work exists within the Sustainable Campuses Project and Community Youth Action Project.
