

Nature NB - Espèces en Péril (Lewnanny Richardson)

Nature NB - Species at Risk is a provincial non profit organization located in New Brunswick, Canada. Our focuses are mostly on the recovery of species at risk and their habitats. We have been working on behalf of species at risk for the past 21 years and are especially recognized for the positive effect we have had on the protection of the endangered Piping Plover. We are also working to protect and educate the public about various species of plants and have recently added to our program the newly listed species at risk, the Chimney Swift.

To do so, we are aiming our work on the education by conducting multiples presentation in our community, schools and various media. We are also encouraging partnerships between our organization and the local population. Our coastal guardian program is operating since 1995 to help protect the Piping Plover in the Acadian peninsula. As for the Chimney Swift, a recent program was put in place to construct towers especially designed for them, to increase the number of suitable nesting sites.
